

ALASKA

Despite enactment of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPAA, P.L. 104-191), individuals with preexisting conditions continue to face challenges accessing affordable and adequate health insurance. HIPAA sets minimum standards of protection to improve access to health insurance for millions of Americans obtaining coverage through group insurance. HIPAA also imposes some limits on the time that preexisting conditions may be excluded from coverage and guarantees access to coverage for certain individuals who lose group coverage. However, HIPAA does not address the private individual insurance market. Despite its strengths, HIPAA has many gaps that have been exposed over the decade since its enactment, including insufficient protection of individuals with chronic illnesses. Below is a snapshot of chronic illness and the uninsured population in your state.

The Alaska Comprehensive Health Insurance Association (ACHIA) was created in 1993 to help individuals who are unable to acquire health insurance due to preexisting conditions and those individuals who held health insurance prior to being shutout due to preexisting conditions. The premium cap for the pool is set at 150 percent of the average, standard market rate. These premiums, along with assessments on insurers provide the funding for this high-risk pool.<sup>6</sup>

HEALTH INSURANCE PORTABILITY ASSURANCE INITIATIVE

The goal of the National Patient Advocate Foundation (NPAF) Health Insurance Portability Assurance Initiative is to ensure access to affordable and adequate health insurance for all individuals, particularly those who have become uninsurable due to a preexisting condition or a family history of chronic, debilitating, or life-threatening conditions. NPAF stands ready to work with federal, state, and local policymakers and other stakeholders on this important policy initiative.
