

MISSOURI

Despite enactment of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 (HIPAA, P.L. 104-191), individuals with preexisting conditions continue to face challenges accessing affordable and adequate health insurance. HIPAA sets minimum standards of protection to improve access to health insurance for millions of Americans obtaining coverage through group insurance. HIPAA also imposes some limits on the time that preexisting conditions may be excluded from coverage and guarantees access to coverage for certain individuals who lose group coverage. However, HIPAA does not address the private individual insurance market. Despite its strengths, HIPAA has many gaps that have been exposed over the decade since its enactment, including insufficient protection of individuals with chronic illnesses. Below is a snapshot of chronic illness and the uninsured population in your state.

The Missouri Health Insurance Pool was created by the Missouri General Assembly to provide those who have been unable to purchase health coverage due to preexisting conditions the opportunity to do so. The Missouri Health Insurance Pool is funded by assessments to insurers based on volume of business conducted within Missouri, which are in turn offset by tax credits applied against the premium taxes paid by insurers.⁶
